Tom O'Re 'e's fight club up in Bridgerort, Comb, promises to furnish the long expected revival of the fistic game for local enthusiasts, if last night's show can be taken as a means of judging.

The Royale Golf and Athletic Association—that is the politic way of referring to the club—began its history last night by conducting three contests in the Park Theatre. The stellar attraction, a fifteen-round "go" between Kid Broad and Billy Gardner, of Lowell, Mass., was won by the former.

Many New Yorkers were among the large crowd that witnessed the bouts.

The show was the first seen in Bridgeport in two years, and the result was an outpouring of sporting men from all nearby sections.

Among the most prominent persons present were Mayor Hugh Sterling, of Bridgeport: the city's Board of Fottee.

The opening bout was slated as ten rounds between Larry Temple, a colored fighter, of Chicago, and Jim Burke, of New York. Temple simply battered Burlen stopped the bout and declared Temple the winner. The bout lasted one minute and fifty-five seconds.

On account of the brevity of this bout Manager O'Rourke put on an extra bout of six rounds, the principals being Walter Burge, of Boston, and Sam Bolan, the colored boxer, of New York. They put up a very fast fight for five rounds, in the sixth round Bolan floored Burgo twice in succession with left and right swings on the jaw, and as Burgo was grough when he get up the second time Roferce Bullen stopped the bout to prevent a possible knockout and awarded the decision to Bolan.

The principals in the main bout, Kid Broad and Bauy Gardner, were advertised to box a fifteen-round encounter at 125 pounds. Both looked trained to the minute, although Gardner was a pound and a half overweight, which

Although the Royale Club is credited with 'encouraging golf in its charter, there was not one of the spectators present who would know a golf bail it he saw one. If there are any members connected with the club who can play golf they were evidently on their vacation or they don't favor pugillsm, for the foreign and his left to the base of the foreign and his left to the law.
